TUESDAY EVENING, JULY 25, 1882.

They have a wonderful cave at Low Moor; one of the great curiosities of Virginia. The entrance is large and roomy, in fact, all the passages and rooms are large with high ceilings. Stalactites and stalagmites are abundant; they glimmer and flash in the torch light like icicles in the sun, and are very pretty. In here, like all caves, we have the ball room with its beautifully frescoed ceiling, the church or chapel with its high pulpit, all surrounded by glittering or-naments; we also find the lake that has never been crossed or sounded. But one of the greatest curiosities is the graveyard; the little mounds of earth in rows on each side of the path gives it quite a sepulchral appearance, and causes a shiver of awe to pass over you as if you were in a city of the dead sure enough, it looks so natural. And then we have the devil's brick yard. I don't know why they think that he displayed his handiwork here, unless it is because he has always been supposed to occupy a hole in the ground; but lying scattered around on the floor of this immense room are numerous chunks of clay resembling old bats. It has never been fully explored, but you can travel for miles and then not see it all. Parties have been lost in it several times, but were hunted up by their friends .- Bedford Sen-
